
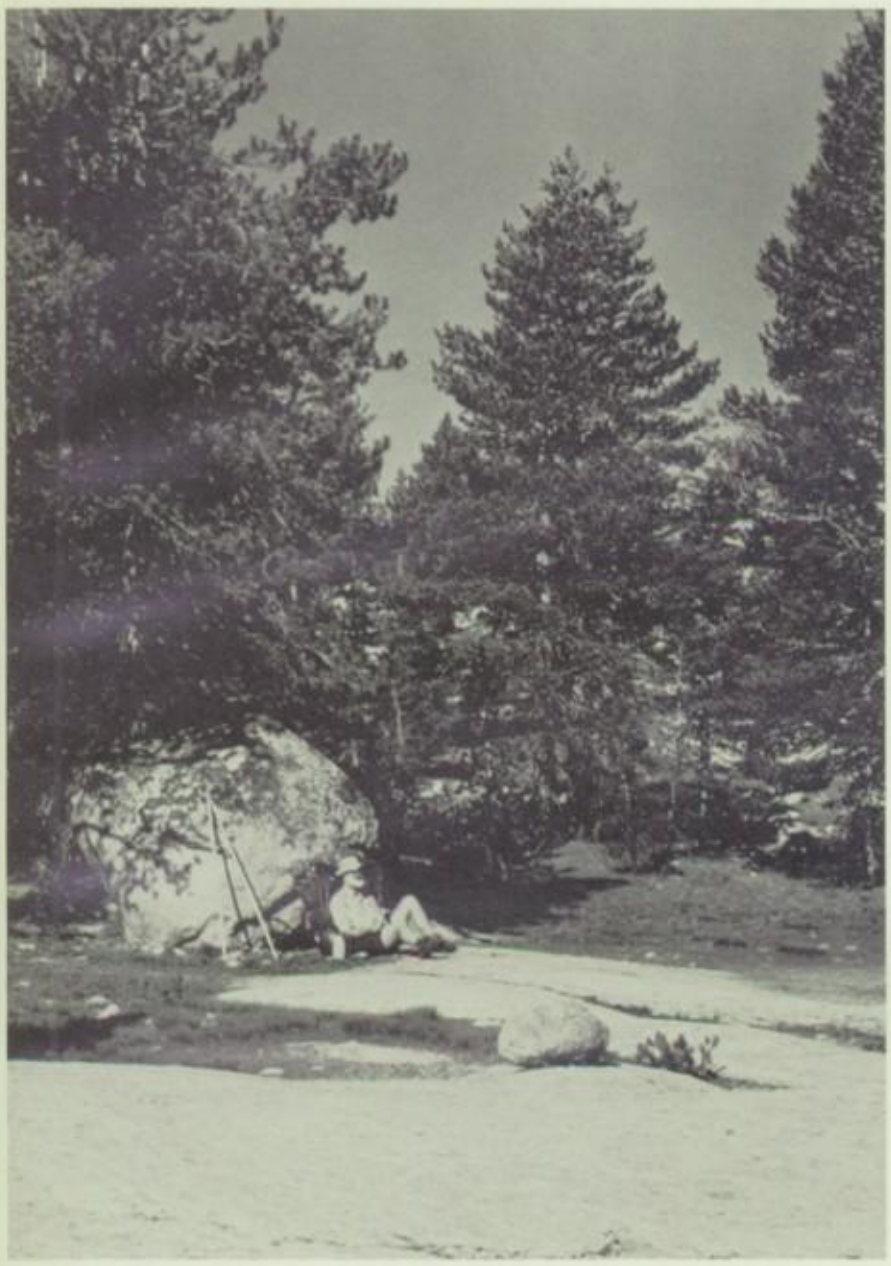
BROOK 1975

to the reverend robert l. darwall



We see the dimension for living he fostered in us nicely set forth by a paragraph of the prayer he composed for the commencement of the class of 1975:

Disturb us, Lord, when we are too well-pleased with ourselves; when our dreams have come true because we dreamed too little; when we have arrived safely because we sailed too close to the shore. Disturb us, Lord, when with the abundance of things we posess, we have lost our thirst for the water of life; when having fallen in love with time, we have ceased to dream of eternity; and in our efforts to build the new earth, we have allowed our vision of the new heaven to grow dim. Stir us, Lord, to dare more boldly, to venture on wider seas, where storms shall show your mastery;
where losing sight of land, we shall find the stars.
We ask you to push back the horizons of our hopes, and push us into the future in strength, courage, hope, and love.

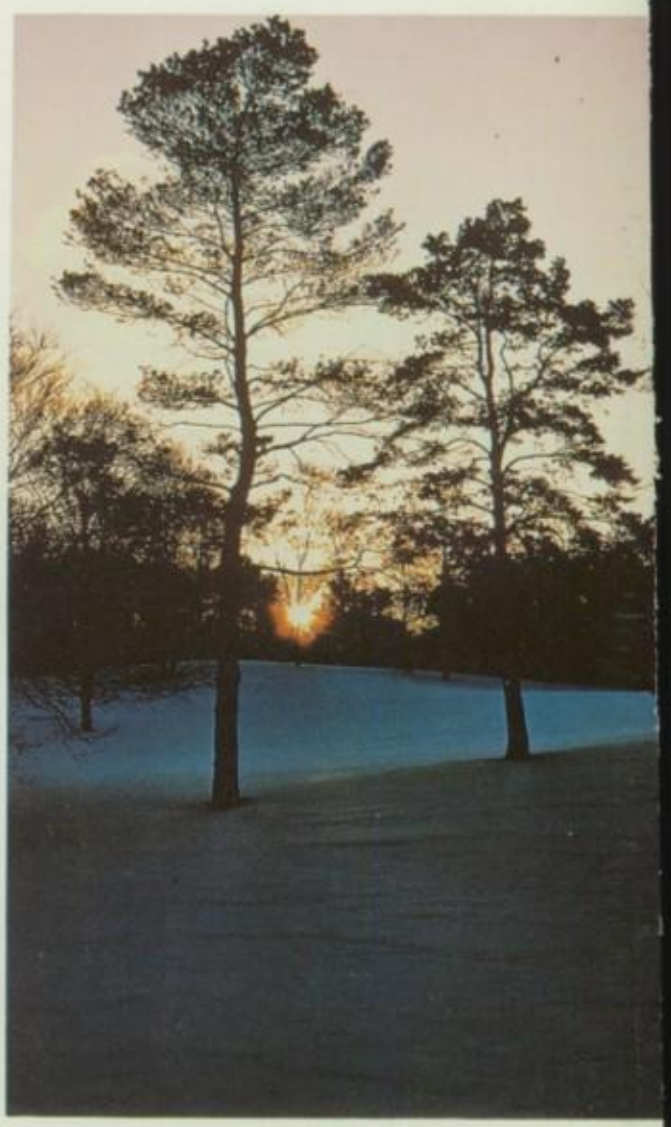
When we say "Cranbrook" many images comes to mind. To the public, Cranbrook is a beautiful park, a pleasant place to spend a sunny day. To the artistically inclined, Cranbrook is an art school, a gallery, Milles statues, and Saarinen architecture. To bird watchers, Cranbrook is a mecca, for more than 150 species have been sighted in its bushes and trees. Others come to see the astonishing exhibits at the Institute of Science. And so on. Yet, to the student at Cranbrook School, Cranbrook of course is much more.



Carl Milles Sculptor

I came to Cranbrook, with the promise of eternal spring — to me it has been as I have called it my lovely Sing Sing. The youth here has been wonderful — else I have felt very much alone comparing myself with Hayden in his years of retirement on the Esterhazy estate. But I too can repeat Hayden's words: "These sixteen years have been to me lone-some but good — I have developed as an artist and have met friends."

Eliel Saarinen Architect

I became an architect in 1897. I had a classical training in school, but already in the school years I freed myself from the old forms and went my own way. I don't see the revolution. I see only evolution. And as I look back over those thirty-five years, I think often that the evolution is too slow.

. . . No, we can not get logic in architecture as long as we use styles which are only decorative, only empty ornaments which do not have any connection with our contemporary life. We have to get rid of the styles. They are poison for living architecture or living art.

Created in 1927 as a choir school for Christ Church, Cranbrook quickly evolved into a college preparatory institution, high in academic standards, generally known to produce "fine young gentlemen."

Dr. William Oliver Stevens
Headmaster 1927-1935

In brief, the academic idea of Cranbrook has been to teach the meaning of hard work, to set up high standards of mastery, to encourage boys to think, and to open their eyes to the world about them in its most significant aspects of thought, and endeavor

Cranbrook is only six years old, but even now, like the trees and shrubs in the quadrangle and the ivy on the walls, certain fine customs and ideals have already taken root, grown and attached themselves to the academic structure. Of course much more remains to be done, for the building of an ideal school can never be completed.

In Witness Whereof, GEORGE G. BOOTH, as Donor, and GEORGE G. BOOTH, GUSTAVUS D. POPE, HENRY S. HULBERT, SAMUEL S. MARQUIS, WARREN S. BOOTH, JAMES S. BOOTH and HENRY S. BOOTH, Trustees as aforesaid, who execute this instrument in token of their acceptance of the trust upon them thereby imposed, have all hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

With each new headmaster that came to Cranbrook, an alteration of the educational approach occured. William Oliver Stevens, first to control the school's philosophy, was known as a strict and often harsh disciplinarian. Rudolph Lindquist, succeeding Stevens, was largely responsible for introducing arts and crafts into the curriculum. As third headmaster, the Reverend W. Brook Stabler served as a democratic strength during the war years, asking that the American way be upheld in school life. Harry Hoey, who followed in 1950, is generally regarded as a moral force at Cranbrook, requesting a strong look at mankind's future. Robert Sandoe, a "modernist" who left in 1972, directed emphasis away from college prep, and towards more individual expression.

Cranbrook today contains remnants of past educational policies. What currently goes on here is a combination of this past, along with guidance from the present headmaster, Christopher Corkery.

Dr. Rudolph D. Lindquist
Headmaster 1938-1943

In his Awards Night speech in 1941, Dr. Lindquist spoke of the 'truths that Cranbrook lives by: "the emphasis upon learning, upon the value of arts and crafts, and upon democracy. Democracy at Cranbrook, he said, manifested itself in the mutual respect and regard in teacher-pupil relationships, in student leadership, in the emphasis upon character and accomplishment rather than upon money, in the emphasis upon Christian ideals as the cornerstone of democracy, which is in fact an emphasis upon citizenship. "More than ever, "he said, "we need institutions which like Cranbrook are solemnly and reverently dedicated to the perpetuation of the way of life we call democracy."

— From: Forty Years On
by Bruce N. Coulter

Reverend W. Brook Stabler
Headmaster 1944-1950

There is much that sings in the world today, and you can rejoice to be alive! Never before in the history of the human race has there been a time more filled with opportunity, a time more challenging and more revolutionary. Never within the memory of man has there been so much unfinished business to which young men can set their hands. It all resolves itself to this: If you have what we've tried desperately hard to give you here — courage, integrity, intelligence, adventuresomeness, consecration — and I believe most of you have — then you may walk breastforward into a troubled world, never doubting clouds will break. Then you may face the future with faith, the faith so well defined as "the assurance of things hoped for, the conviction of things not seen." Be not afraid! The swan song of mankind is not yet sung. The birth pangs of a new era are not to be confused with the gasps and contortions of death. The rebirth of a nation and a world is a hand — and men reborn are summoned to attend. This is the truth, I promise you.

Harry D. Hoey
Headmaster 1950-1964

I know who I am — and I know who you are. We — all of us — are links between the past and the future. It is as simple as that. We are the bridges over which pass all of the loving, the thinking, the aspiring of the countless generations which have preceded us on to the endless procession of generations which follow. In us — each of us — lies the total heritage of the human race. Without us there would be no future! We are important! Without us there will be no law, no medicine, no education — no schools, no libraries, no hospitals — nothing that transmits to our children the evidence that in the human clay there is something more than just mud and water.

Robert Sandoe
Headmaster 1964-1972

And yet we are indisputably a college preparatory school. And what does all this have to do with gaining admission to the great colleges and universities? Only this: that our task is too important for us to allow ourselves to be limited to teaching techniques which may enable a boy to pass examinations but which will not equip him to cope with the great issues of life which will face him in college and beyond. If a school's only reason for being is to teach for college entrance, then it becomes a servant to a false god, which says not, "seek the truth" or "seek wisdom and understanding," but instead, "learn how to take examinations"; "master techniques"; "memorize"; "follow instructions"

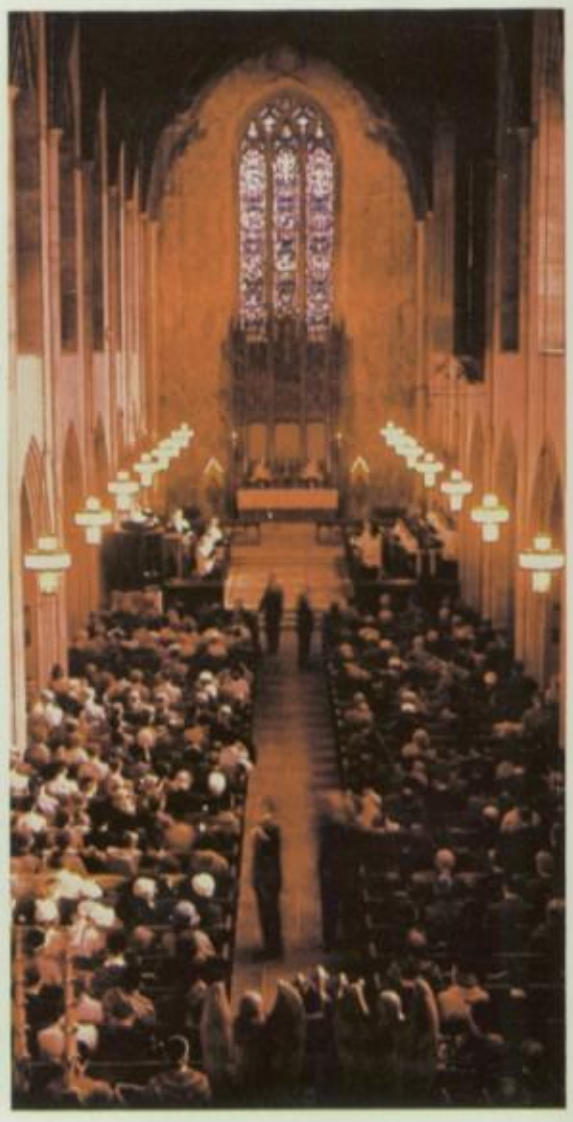
We are not interested in developing intellectual robots.

Our purpose is to build a man capable of understanding himself and capable of being at one with his God and his World, so that he can lead a life, not necessarily of ease and comfort, but of utility and substance.

Christopher C. Corkery
Headmaster 1972-

The central nature of our personality is concern. Concern for the individual as a student, athlete, artist, musician, actor or whatever he chooses to do to help himself in his own development with the aid of concerned adults around him.

We do not believe education takes place only in the classroom, but in fact comes about by living in a community and learning to cope with the concerns of self as well as others. If our students are willing to commit themselves to a new and different experience that encourages participation in all kinds of curricular and extracurricular opportunities, they will be successful at Cranbrook.



While Cranbrook holds a certain mystique to all. The so "image" of the school is only a small part of what it actually is. Contained in the traditions of education here exists a modern casualness. Within the demands of a strictly proven method lies an unusual allowance for the new and different. Cranbrook is strongly connected to its heritage, yet at the same time continually moving beyond it. In short, inside what appears to be Cranbrook one can continually find new experiences.

LIFE WITHOUT BEAUTY IS ONLY

class of 1975

Marc D. Appleman

As a transfer student in my senior year, everything at Cranbrook was completely new to me. While most of my classmates were gathering memories, I was getting first impressions.

What stands out above all? The physical beauty of the Cranbrook campus ... the excitement of having my articles published in the Crane and the Cranium ... the satisfaction of being part of Cranbrook's best basketball team in recent years ... the curiosity about — and ultimately the pleasure in — new teachers, new friends, new customs, new occasions.

No year could have been better spent.

Entered Form VI

Marc Appleman

John H. Austin

Life is like a piano; what you get out of it depends on how you play it.

"The world is supposed to be full of possibilities, but they narrow down to a pretty few in most personal experiences. There's a lot of good fish in the sea ... maybe ... but the vast masses seem to be mackeral or herring, and if you're not mackeral or herring yourself, you are likely to find very few good fish in the sea ...

— D. H. Lawrence

Entered Form III: Crane 6; Y.F.U. Exchange Student 6; Erg 6; CJR 6; Band 3; Glee Club 6; Marquis Club 6 (Vice President) "... so susceptible are we to what is expected of us!"

Jack Austin

Michael I. Bacher

I like to sleep late in the morning
Don't like to wear no shoes
Make love to the women while I'm livin'
Get drunk from a bottle of booze

—Jerry Jeff Walker —

Maybe I've been quite lonely
And maybe I thought you'd be home tonight
Maybe we could just talk some
And maybe I could even spend the night

— Al Anderson —

You don't miss your water, baby till your well runs day

— Taj Mahal

Entered Form 5: Trade Skills; X-Country; Board of Directors.

Time I was on my way
Thanks to you I'm much obliged
For such a pleasant stay.
But now it's time for me to go

Thaddeus R. Barnum

If our friendship depends on things like space and time, then when we finally overcome space and time, we've destroyed our own brotherhood! But overcome space, and all we have left is Here. Overcome time, and all we have left is Now. And in the middle of Here and Now, don't you think that we might see each other once or twice?

Hets; I'm Thad 1

" 'Possibly', you will add on your account with a grin, 'people will not understand it either who have received a slap in the face', and in that way you will politely hint to me that I, too, perhaps, have had the experience of a slap in the face in my life, and so I speak as one who knows. I bet you are thinking that. But set your minds at rest, gentlemen, I have not received a slap in the face, though it is absolutely a matter of indifference to me what you may think about it. Possibly, I regret, myself, that I have given so few slaps in the face during my life. But enough ... not another word on that subject of such extreme interest to you."

Sing Sing sang. Like Eddie placing the gnome at the crossroads under house arrest. He be a priest this madman. His music is our ritual. Think on what happens to people without a sound.

Sing Sing sang. And sons of caciques wept and spoke in tongues of fire. They cried. I saw them. Clutching to their breast the sacred spiritualism of a people who talk to the sun. Who see the burning bush and are not blinded. Remember them. Remember. The oath we owe to our gods. To ourselves.

Sing Sing sang. Eddie reminding even the bricks of their holiness. Shall we move now/shall we hold hands like Eddie made Sing Sing. Listen then scream out the nearest window.
We will hear each other.

After going to Cranbrook from nursery school on, don't I deserve to be nostalgic? My awareness of activities and people lead me to over-indulgence, but I'm so glad I did. I know Cranbrook is particularly unique; and I feel that I'm lucky to have met the people, not just those to whom I'm close but everyone there, in such a special environment. I've enjoyed being humorous and I hope I wasn't too offensive. In my busy life those moments when we really talked were quite special. I would like to thank the Booths, the administration, the teachers, the students, and my parents for making this my opportunity. I hope that each of us will be satisfied with ourselves. In our rhythm of earthly life we tire of light. We are glad when the day ends, when the play ends; and ecstasy is too much pain.
We are children quickly tired: children who are up in the night and fall asleep as the rocket is fired; and the day is long for work or play . . .
And we must extinguish the candle, put out the light and relight it;
Forever must quench, forever relight the flame. — T.S. Eliot

While you're starting to find the right road, there is one thing you should know, what's hip today might become passe! (T. of P.) It's not the deed, it's not the thought, it's if you get caught. Cranbrook: 5 years it's been a long time; good times, bad times, high times, low times, a lot of together interesting people — a conglomeration of people from all walks of life — I've seen the primary group feelings of the students towards one another break down into competitive superficial little clics dispersed throughout the school; with their esoteric group codes etc. Disciplinary actions and social life are Victorian in nature. I love it . . . and I'll miss these five years of my life. Thanks people past and present. I couldn't have done it without Fran & Bill & Roeper. Freak out in a moonage day dream. Oh yea Chas.

"Thank you for everything you've taught me," said Milo to everybody. "And thank you for what you've taught us," said the king. Milo got in and, with one last look, started down the road, with everyone waving him on.

"Goodbye," shouted Azaz. "Always remember the importance of words." "And numbers," added the Mathemagician forcefully.

"Surely you don't think numbers are as important as words?" he heard Azaz shout from the distance. "Is that so?' replied the Mathemagician a little more faintly ... "Why, if —." "Oh dear," thought Milo; "I do hope they don't start it all again." And in a moment they had faded from sight as the road dipped, turned, and headed for home. — Norton Juster

Ho! Ho! to the bottle I go
To heal my heart and drown my woe
Rain may fall and wind may blow,
And many miles be still to go,
But under a tall tree I will lie,
And let the clouds go sailing by.

The road goes ever on and on,
Down from the door where it began
Now far ahead the road has gone,
And I must follow if I can,
Pursuing it with eager feet,
Until it joins some larger way,
Where many paths and errands meet
And whiter then? I can not say.

that was the year that was . . .

It was a year in which mediocrity flourished, and yet one in which moments of excellence or triumph glowed with incredible vividness. It was a year which perhaps suffered by comparision to others, and yet one which was punctuated by isolated instances of near-brilliance and passion.

It was a year of plenty. Activity thrived. Sheer quantity sometimes showed signs of overtaking quality, but we still cultivated that most basic of creative urges, the need to keep busy, which for some became almost an obsession. There was always something going on.

Our pastimes ranged from the ridiculous to the sublime. Even at the very end of the year, some were debating whether to bring back the mid-morning cookie break, while others were celebrating the sun with music and dance. But even with such monumentally different areas of concern, it was impossible for each of us not to be affected by the other. We were all sophomores again when those perennial tenth-grade social science surveys were shoved in our faces. A universal shout of joy was elicited when it was announced that Captain Marvel episodes were to be shown in assembly. We were all so different, and yet, strangely, we were together.

But in a school of less that five hundred students, we still found it necessary to divide ourselves into a slew of committees, a set of dozens of interlocking gears which tried very vigorously to give the impression that they were keeping the school in motion. Then there were the unallied masses, the uncommitted, or perhaps merely "uncommitteed", who ignored the countless sign-up sheets and calls to group action. Some of them simply preferred individual action; others vociferously complained about the "elitism" of the committee structure. But the committees continued to multiply, clothed in their various mystiques, sustaining the myth that organization necessarily breeds accomplishment.

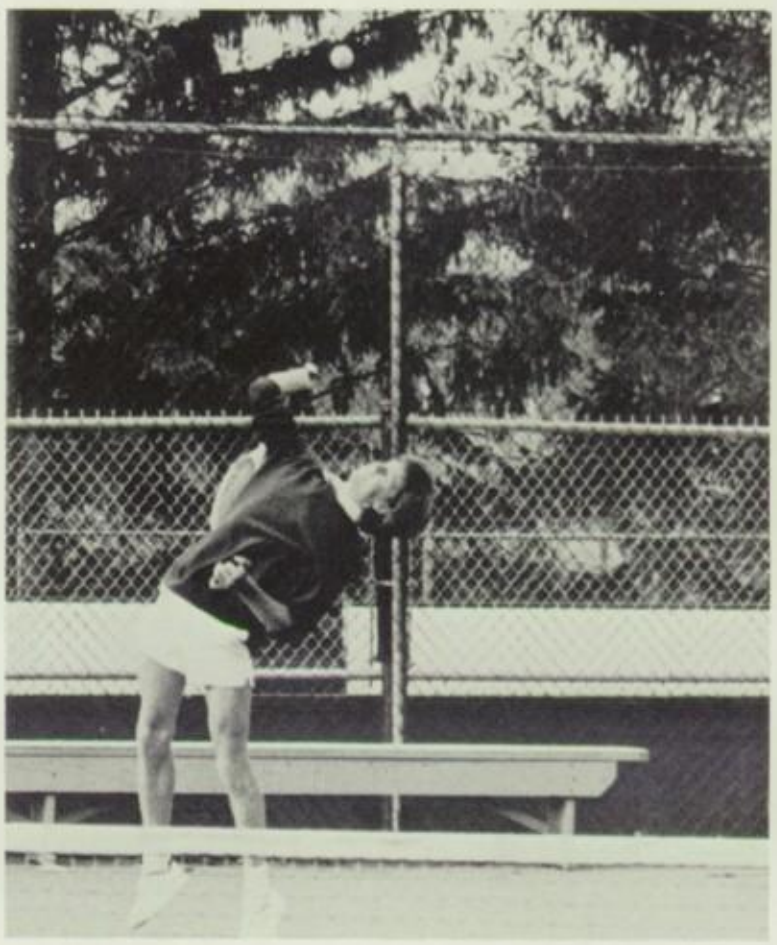
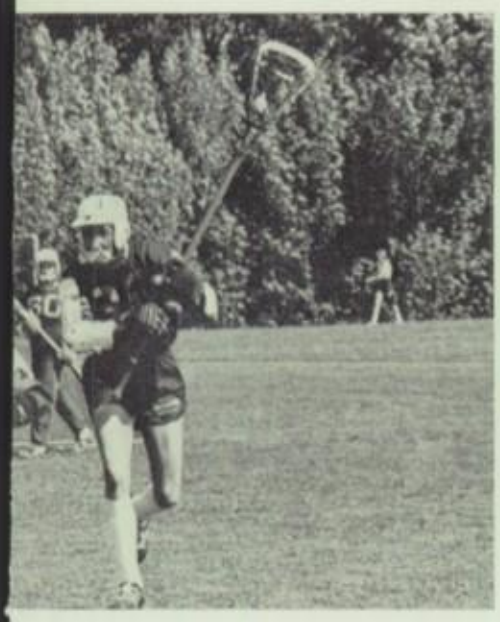
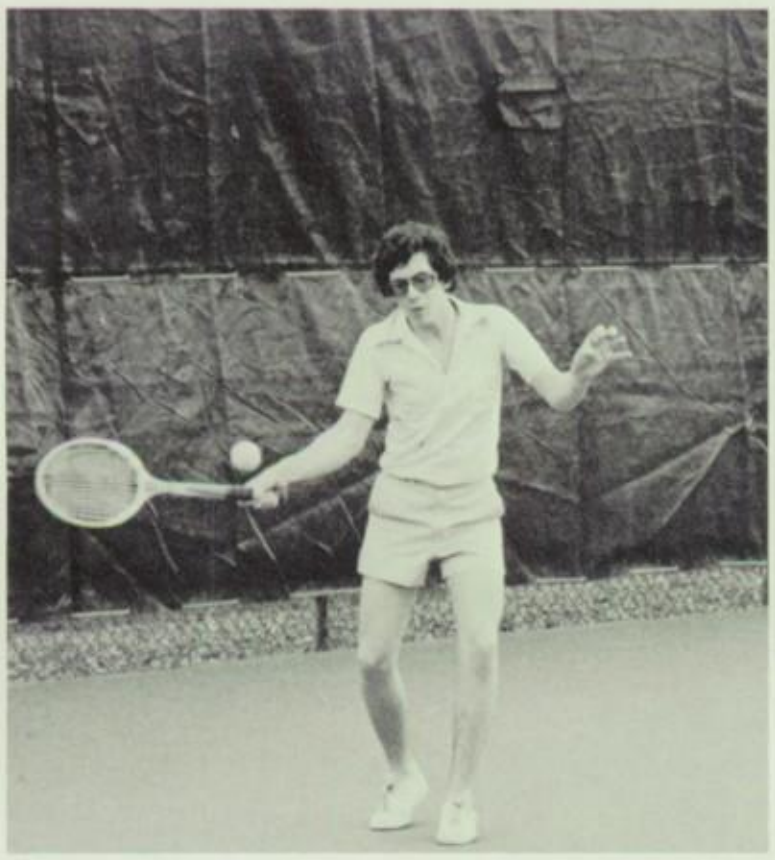
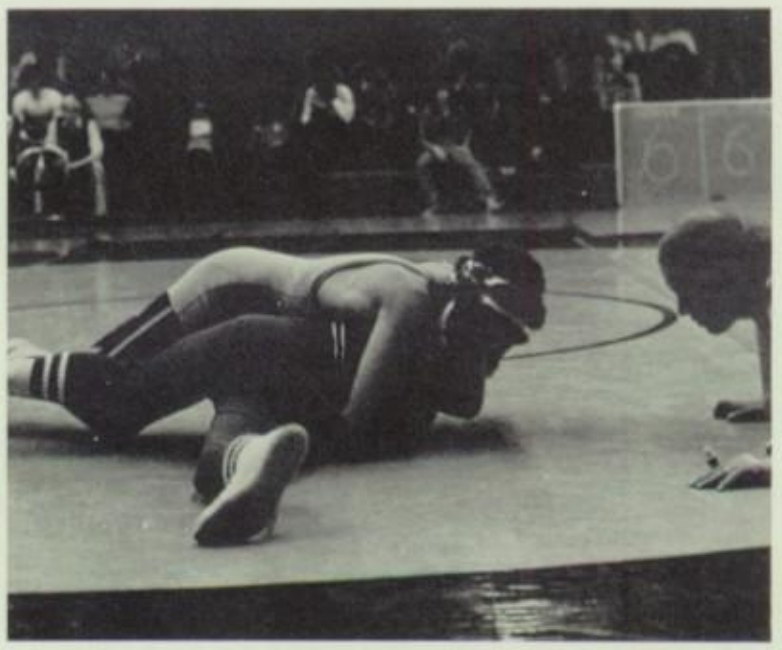
We tried all year, tried to duplicate the successes of the past, tried to recreate the glory and the excitement that was yesterday. Our attempts were decent ones, our efforts were well-planned and competently executed, but genius was rare; we strived for the perfection that existed in our memories, but, of course, it usually eluded us. It was the year of the tie, the victory almost clinched, but not quite. There were almost no league championships this year, although we came painfully close to them. Seasons started slowly, with few victories, and even fewer fans, but the teams never failed to gain momentum, to force themselves vigorously toward that final all-important victory. And the school gradually went with them, shouting and applauding and hoping for the success which, ultimately, they never found. For we lacked the consistency, the sureness of purpose and action that had always been our strength.









We were plagued by a chronic feeling, a horribly draining and depressing perception, that there was nothing for us to do, no way we could really touch this school and this community, and, by helping, changing, or even destroying it, leave an impression. Social action seemed pointless or futile. We sensed a calm in the air, a deceleration of the course of world events, as the war ended and with it died all the very emotional controversies of the past decade. We were far from content, but we were rather helpless; there were plenty of economic and political crises to command our anxiety, but we had no role to play in their resolution. There were no longer any clear-cut "issues," and without them, we stopped thinking. We likewise stopped writing about the world, for it no longer stirred our hearts. The CRANE became largely a repository for the weary ramblings of sensitive but confused people, who could scarcely eke out two typewritten pages to communicate to the world. We puttered along, aware but perhaps baffled by the complex and deep turmoil that was slowly rocking the world. We lived on the edge of a dream, and we were afraid of falling off.

The days were long and bright, and the sun and the wind and the rain and the snow each added a different dimension to the visual euphoria that was Cranbrook.We were alone, sheltered in a world unseen and unheard by those around us; we were visibly secluded, psychologically insulated. We could not, as do some in less sumptuous academic surroundings, retreat from a dreary environment into our studies. For us, classes were largely an obligation, a duty to be fulfilled so that we could spend our days on this campus, absorbing the understanding and knowledge that the grounds and its people afforded. It was impossible to separate Cranbrook as an experience from its physical beauty, and it was perhaps this preoccupation with physicality that made a full intellectual life so difficult to realize.

The day became a symbol for all that was picturesque, lazy, and dull. We worked at night, and our nights were late ones. School publications were assembled in dimly-lit corners of the school, in the dead of night. Performers practicied and plays were rehearsed in lonely music rooms and empty auditoriums, in the dead of night. Papers were written, ideas were born, and strategy was formed, in the dead of night. The result of all this late-night concentration was too often predictable and unexciting, but sometimes, in those all too few magic moments, we could light up the midnight sky with something new; a fresh idea, an unusually effective issue of the newspaper, a really handsome literary magazine, a particularly entertaining performance. These instances were exceedingly rare this year, but hoping for them kept us awake and willing to work.

Disappointment was rampant, to be sure. Our egos were damaged and our expectations denied. Members of a very promising senior class were rejected by prestigious colleges; the new student government failed to garner student support; a play was cancelled because rehearsals were going so badly. We each had our own set of priorities, but, in some way, we were each saddened by our inability to fulfill them. The frustration mounted and manifested itself in renewed instances of vandalism, stealing, and that ever-present, much-discussed, but poorly understood quality, student apathy.

There were extraordinarily discouraging things happening. At the end of the year, five teachers were leaving, some to leave teaching entirely, others angry at the direction education at Cranbrook was heading. Another had been dismissed, lo and behold, for disciplinary reasons. Student discipline was being severely tightened; Mr. Corkery proclaimed that although he normally favored "justice before bureaucracy", the startling increase in teenage alcoholism and related problems had necessitated one all-encompassing punishment for possession or use of alchohol or drugs; immediate explusion. The bubble seemed ready to burst.

And yet the spring brought a miraculous renewal of hope. We might have expected the seniors to be getting ready to leave Cranbrook, with nothing less on their minds than ways to help the school or reform the educational system. Instead we found them, along with underclassmen, actively debating educational alternatives, in a very exciting World Affairs Seminar. Or perceptively and lucidly defining the school's problems and suggesting ways to remedy them, in a totally student-organized "Student-Faculty-Administration Relations Committee", completely "open" and dedicated to "unification and awareness of Cranbrooks' and Kingswoods' goals in order to form a more fully functional community." Or participating in a new, expanded "Cranbrook School Service Program" which, through student maintenance work, was expected to save the school thousands of dollars in overhead expenses. The year was ending, but we didn't stop trying.

It was, at first glance, the most ordinary and least outstanding of years. We laughed and we cried and, at times, we didn't care. We accomplished nothing monumental. But we usually tried.
